Human leukotriene B(4) (LTB(4)) is a potent neutrophil chemoattractant. The 5-lipoxygenase (5-LOX) enzyme, which oxidizes arachidonic acid, is required for its synthesis. While large differences in the cDNA of the gene for 5-LOX are known, little is known about the structure of 5-LOX promoter. In this study, we determined the 5' flanking sequence of the human gene for 5-LOX. Two putative 5-LOX gene promoters, P1 and P2, with a total length of 6113 base pairs, were identified. In both promoters, three GC boxes were found to be located at -522, -1031, and -1717 to -1719 base pairs. The 5'-flanking region of the promoter P2 lacked GC boxes, at -522, -1031, and -1717 to -1719 base pairs. A deletion of 8 base pairs at -270 to -271 was observed in the promoter P2, which decreased promoter activity at least 10-fold. Thus, the 5-LOX gene contains two promoters, P1 and P2. Each has its own unique sequence and different activities./*****
