.Q: Python if statement error Trying to use xrange(1, 101010101101010) using the if statement, but i keep getting the error: TypeError:'str' object is not callable. Code: def f(x): return x f(xrange(1, 101010101101010)) A: xrange is a function. You're trying to call it on a string. xrange takes 2 arguments, the first being a sequence, and the second being the starting value. If you want to use a string, you need to run it through eval:

```
def f(x): return eval(x) print f(xrange(1, 101010101101010)) # 732316303879303
```

You can also use the str.format() method to achieve the same thing (if you're using Python 2.5 or newer):

def f(x): return format(x, 'x') print f(xrange(1, 101010101101010)) # 732316303879303

To get the print out into two columns, you need to change the format string to use a % 2d place holder. If the whole range were numbers then this would work:

def f(x): return format(x, '% 2d')
```

The final output will look like this: >>> print f(xrange(1, 101010101101010)) 732316303879303 >>> Alcoholism and stress: can nonbibilators undergo antisocial behavior without the stress of alcohol abuse?
