Record your voice messages and send them out. A voice message, also known as an audio message, is a message recorded in such a way that it can be played back as a voice (though recordings can be played back in a variety of ways as well, such as by a Braille device). Voice mail is a form of message retrieval, a data service provided via telecommunication networks. Voicemail is a feature in digital voice devices that allow users to record messages, or voice mail, which are then retrieved later and played, or listened to, by the intended recipient of the message. Rather than being sent to a message center, users hear the message right away, in real time, and may retain the message for later listening. The recipient has the option to retrieve the message. Example Usages: ·This is a message reminding you of a date in the future. ·Please call back in one hour to answer my questions about your order. ·While you are on the road, I need to know your current location.
