The city's urban sprawl is said to be the largest in East Asia. As such, Fuzhou has become one of the most densely populated parts of China, with over 18,000,000 people inhabiting the administrative and business centre alone. A number of Fuzhou's buildings are among the tallest in China, and the tallest in the country, including the Bao'an International Conference Center, which was the tallest building in the world for over a decade, the 2nd tallest building in the world in the 1990s and since 2009 a leader in the world's tallest free-standing residential building. Fuzhou's urban sprawl has also added millions of square metres of office and apartment space, resulting in Fuzhou's mixed-use buildings housing upwards of 100,000 residents. With the recent growth of cyber-security in China, Fuzhou has been placed on the national and provincial list of top cyber-terrorism centres
