The problem with this extension method is that it has to be redefined for each different type of the product data structure. The second idea is that we could just define a new data structure for the translation. This approach is not perfect either. It has some downsides such as the loss of type safety. In this post I'm going to show how to solve this problem by using a generic structure which can be extended with any type of data structure that it operates on. Since all we want is a generic data structure for the translation, we have to make sure that it can at least compute the translation. This is where the fun part starts. We want this data structure to have a function that can be called multiple times to use it as an interpreter. This is the function that is called by the interpreter when a statement is parsed by it. The function is called with two parameters: Input type The type of the input structure. This is only needed in the c6a93da74d
