Code: A: try this Research has demonstrated that diuretics, in particular non-steroidal diuretics, such as furosemide, interact synergistically with GABA (gamma-aminobutyric acid) to inhibit neuronal firing. However, this interaction has thus far been described only in brain slices, which are less adequate than in vivo models. We have therefore developed an in vivo experimental model of diuretic and gamma-aminobutyric acid (GABA) interaction to explore the mechanisms that may underlie this synergism. Four separate experiments have been designed to explore different aspects of this interaction. The first is to determine if diuretics and gamma-aminobutyric acid synergistically inhibit the efferent GABA contractions in the urethral smooth muscle. Rats will be anesthetized and the concentration of GABA in the efferent branches of the pelvic nerve will be measured in the
