When I read that Lightroom 5 was to offer more artificial intelligence, I was interested. The reason why I was interested was because I did not know that this was possible. However, by doing some search, I came across Articulate. They offer AI for image processing and manipulation in Photoshop Elements. They were surprised to find that Lightroom may include this feature and that they were interested in making this available to other Lightroom users. So, let's talk about what AI means in this release. In the context of this release, Adobe agrees that the feature is artificial intelligence. However, it does not promote it as such and the feature is still a software process. So, let's go over each new feature found in Lightroom. All-In-One edits: This is one of the more exciting features. Here you have several settings controls that allow the user to get a more professional-like look. For example, the editing controls such as color schemes and masks for the main color, black, texture, and background are now one location. This is very convenient for a user who does not need to be confused by all the options that are normally available. Artificial Intelligence: As previously discussed, this feature allows Photoshop to have an AI process to complete the job that has once required a separate ribbons plus the tasks that could be handled by AI. For example, cropping, retouching and selection are now automated, but still require a separate interface. However, the point is that it does it with good speed and precision.
