Dynamics of a gravitationally-driven, comet-like object in Taurus. We present V-band (0.41-0.86 microm) adaptive optics observations of the star beta Coronae Borealis in Taurus. Beta Coronae Borealis was observed with the University of Hawaii 2.2-meter telescope (UH2.2m) on Maui in December 1998 using the facility adaptive optics (AO) system. A four-point box pattern was used for pattern was used for pattern was used for pattern subtraction, producing an AO corrected field of 13" x 20" with a spatial sampling of 0.33" x 0.66". In two epochs of observations, V-band images were obtained of beta Coronae Borealis with a 10 s exposure time. The AO system was able to image beta Coronae Borealis at tip-tilt-only (TO) levels of approximately 1.5 seeing. The AO corrected V-band images show that beta Coronae Borealis is surrounded by a dark cloud of nebulous material. On one side of the star is an elongated cloud or cometary tail. The tail is asymmetric and points in the opposite direction of the star is a faint, double-lobed cloud or cometary tail. Baye tentatively identified the tail with the very small object C/1999 J5 (LINEAR) as reported previously by Paolicchi et al. (2001).MICHAEL MULLING, M.S., D.P.H.
