Canon EOS 7D DSLR If you have a Canon camera, chances are you have been given Photoshop or Elements to edit images on your camera. What you may not know, however, is that you could be using the wrong edition for your needs. Despite a decent editing suite, Elements has been designed for prosumers, often requiring novice users to use it. Photo editing suites are not just for people who enjoy playing with digital images. They're for anyone who likes to take or edit photos and needs a suite that is easy to use and can tackle the more complicated work. Using Photoshop for the wrong reasons or applying the wrong settings is a rookie mistake but it can also lead to irreversible damage to your images and yourself. Some of the easier problems that beginners run into are red eye, dodging and burning. Dodging is a feature that removes dark areas from the image while burning features does the same for light areas. When applying these settings, you will often see that the image becomes very dark or light. Dodging and burning are intended to bring your image to life with colors. Imagine a photo of someone dancing. If you applied dodge and burn to the image, the person in the photo would appear to be covered in darkness or light. This is meant to remove the loss of detail caused by overexposure and to improve the overall quality of the image. Red eye is the common occurrence when using a flash in a camera. The light reflection from the flash can cause a person's eyes to appear black instead of seeing the true color and detail of the eyes. When editing or taking a photo of someone, using your camera's flash will often cause red eye. There are some basic tricks to removing the red eye effect. Removing red eye can be done by using a quick filter or by using a free app to remove it. The quick filter is actually a bad idea in the long term since it does not enhance the color of the image. This can often be the cause of red eye. With the quick filter, you are simply moving a slider to move the effect around the image. A more effective solution for removing red eye is to use the Gellius Red Eye Remover app on your computer. You would open the app, change its settings to your preferences, and click the start button to remove red eyes from your photos. The app is free on App Store. a681f4349e

Q: Silverlight and XML I have just developed an application for my company in C# using Silverlight 3. It loads a xml object from a file and displays it within the silverlight application (simple page with text). I have now created a new website for my company and I need to create a new site with a Silverlight application that loads a different xml object and displays it. I need to change the code a little bit, to the xml object and the page layout but I am just wondering what the best way to go about it would be. The one idea I have is to put the new xml object in the same web xml and simply change the xml object that is being loaded. This seems the simplest way but I'm not sure if this would work with Silverlight. Is there any other way to go about this? Perhaps creating a new silverlight application for each xml object? A: Creamy, you need to take a look at the XAP file! There's a single XAP that contains your Silverlight code and all the resources needed to run it. The XAP is what we actually deploy to the client. When you load this XAP file, the Silverlight code can start executing and do a lot of things, including obtaining information from you Silverlight application and the XAP itself. Once that's done, the XAP is eventually able to do its job of returning XML data to the Silverlight application. And this XML data is then used to create the content for a Silverlight page. So, your XML data (for example) could be stored in a Content property on your XAP. This Content is then later used to populate the Silverlight page, which is much more powerful than just having the XML data in-memory. Q: What does "déjà la montagne" mean? I have heard the term "déjà la montagne" used a few times on TV dramas in French, usually about war stories. The context I think I understand it, but I'd like to know if there's any real meaning to it. I have tried googling it, but the results are mostly about mountains and glaciers and not about people. The context I heard it was a story where a woman, who had had an affair with a soldier for twenty years, turned him into ashes but he didn't know she existed. She

How can you find a good developer? - linker I have been interviewing for about a year now and I'm having a really hard time finding a developer that is qualified for my projects. I'm an experienced php developer, but I'm starting to look for a new position. I know my skills are limited when it comes to some of the more niche languages like NodeJS, but I'm working on expanding my skill set to include those technologies. Any tips on finding a good developer, what to look for, what to pay them, etc? ===== enquru Your best bet is to ask your network for developers who are looking for a new job. Any in your network who are great developers? Have them put their resume up and you can have in on a trial basis. If there are not any developers looking for a job in your network, a good resource is a well known online "jobs" board with lots of employers posting their positions. You just need to do a bit of searching to find them. Good luck! 1994–95 NBA season The 1994–95 NBA season was the 60th season of the National Basketball Association. During the offseason, the Phoenix Suns relocated to Dallas, Texas, and their name was changed to the Dallas Mavericks. The NBA also introduced a new logo. The St. Louis Hawks made their first appearance in the NBA Finals since 1979, their last championship season. The Orlando Magic reached the NBA Finals for the first time. The Magic finished the season with two of the lowest paid teams in NBA history; their payroll was $36.7 million, the lowest in the league. The season saw the rival Denver Nuggets made its first ever NBA Finals appearance, where they lost to the defending champions, the Chicago Bulls. This was also the first of three consecutive seasons in which the Magic made the finals. For the first time in NBA history, three rookies would average 20 points, 5 rebounds and 6 assists in the same season; this was accomplished by Tim Hardaway, Jameer Nelson and Kevin Johnson. The playoffs saw the NBA season record of 50 ties and overtime games broken in the opening round when the New York Knicks and Chicago Bulls tied at the end of the fourth quarter and went into overtime, and New York won the fifth overtime game. The Celtics clinched the NBA
